old folks day at Saltair for many days to come. It cost him a diamond shirt stud that he valued at $125, and for the recovery of which he was offering $25 reward before he left the pavilion. Mr. Bamberger checked his valuables at the office before going in for a bath, and is confident he put his diamond pin into the envelope with the other articles. When he came out and opened the envelope in which his watch, money and other articles had been placed, the pin was missing. He had wrapped it he a piece of brown paper, and was of the opinion that when he tore open the envelope this bit of paper dropped out upon the floor. A dillgent search of the premises was made by the loser and a number of his friends, but no trace of the jewel could be found.
